Connection1 Chess Experience

DiaPlaza Chess Trainings, Day 1 (July 12, 1999)

All twenty-four players of the Connection1 Chess Experience matches are taking part in the training seminars run by two of the world's leading chess trainers, IM Mark Dvoretsky from Russia and GM Artur Yusupov from Germany. The training sessions are taking place in Office Hotel DiaPlaza, the renowned business support centre located in Apeldoorn. In the opening lecture, Yusupov discussed the various types of positions that can arise after exchanging two minor pieces for rook and pawn. This division of material may mean that your opponent has an extra piece for his attack. On the other hand, in one of the main lines in the Open Spanish, black exchanges two pieces for a rook and a pawn on f2, after which he tries to take advantage of the exposed white king by rapidly activating his rooks along the central lines. Black will also try to use his initiative to create speedy passed pawns, in order to annoy the white officers and drive them from their solidly protected squares. The following classic game shows another aspect of this theme.

White: Kg2, Qa4, Ra1, Rc1, Bf4, Nb1, Nb5; a2, b2, e2, f2, g3, h2
Black: Ke8, Qd7, Rc8, Rh8, Bc5, Nc6, Nf6; a7, b6, d5, f7, g7, h7.

In the second part of the session, Mark Dvoretsky emphasized the importance of analyzing games of great players as well as your own games. This is an enormous help in applying ideas you are already familiar with to future games by means of comparison. The following game was thoroughly examined, showing a double-edged battle for the initiative.

DiaPlaza Chess Trainings, Day 2 (July 13, 1999)

The group was split in two for this second training day. Mark Dvoretzky gave a special simul. Each of the participants was given a position from a rather complicated endgame study. With one hour on the clock, the players had to defend their position against Dvoretzky, who had just one hour for all positions. But, of course, he knew the keys and the solutions. Despite the strong field, only two of the players managed to hold their own. All others, including grandmasters Boris Avrukh and Erik van den Doel, simply failed. The second part of the session was devoted to a profound analysis of all the positions, discussing typical mistakes and their reasons. (Afek)

Before the other group, Yusupov talked about what he particularly likes in chess: simplicity and straightforward thinking. He has great admiration for the late Cuban World Champion Capablanca and his way of playing. Yusupov showed his audience some methods to collect small advantages and to exploit a big advantage.

White: Ke2, Rc6, Be3; a3, b2, f2, g2, h3
Black: Kg8, Rd5, Ne6; a5, b5, f7, g5, h5.

Yusupov-Anand (1992)

Yusupov had a small advantage during the entire game, but Anand had defended well so far. In this position, a draw is the most probable outcome after 1...a4 2.Kf3 Re5. Instead, Anand played the careless move 1...g4, to prevent 2.Kf3, only to find out that after 2.hxg4 hxg4 3.b3! a pawn is lost.

In the following game by Capablanca, white neutralises black's initiative with simple means and remains a solid pawn up.

White: Kg1, Qb3, Ra1, Rf1, Bc1, Nc3, Nd4; a3, b2, e3, f2, g2, h2
Black: Kg8, Qg4, Ra8, Rf8, Ba6, Bd6, Nf6; a7, c7, f7, g7, h7

1.h3! Qh4 2.Nf3 Qh5 3.Re1 [intending 4.e4 in order to develop his bishop] 3...Rab8 4.Qa4 Bb7 5.e4 h6 6.Be3 Rfe8 7.Bd4! [the e4 pawn cannot be taken due to 8.Ba7] 7...Nh7 8.Ba7 Ra8 9.Qb5! Qxb5 10.Nxb5 Rxe4 11.Rxe4 Bxe4 12.Pd2 followed by 13.Nxd6.

In the last example Capablanca, as black, first wins a pawn and then shows extremely good technique. He nips all white's chances at counterplay in the bud.

White: Kg2, Ra1, Rd3, Nc3, Ne5; a2, b2, c4, e4, f2, g3, h2
Black: Kg8, Rc8, Rf8, Nf5, Nf6; a7, b6, d6, e6, f7, g7, h7.

1...Nxb3! 2.hxg3 dxe5 3.b3 Rfd8 4.Rad1 Rxd3 5.Rxd3 Kf8 6.f3 Ke7 7.Kf2 h5! 8.Rd1 g5 9.Rh1 Rd8! 10.Ke3 g4 11.fxg4 Nxb3+ 12.Ke2 Nf6 13.Ke3 Rd4 14.Rf1 Ng4+ 15.Ke2 Kf8! 16.Rf3 Kg7 17.Rd3 Kf6 18.Rxd4 exd4 19.Nb5 Ke5 20.Nxa7 Ke4 21.Nc8 d3+ 22.Kd2 Kd4! [intending 23...Nf6 and 24...Ne4, winning] and the rest was simple.

After winning the pawn, black did not give white a single chance any more. Yusupov reproduced this game without showing deep variations, just to give an impression of the easy fluency with which the great technician brought home his advantage. You could tell from the twinkle in his eyes that this is the kind of chess Yusupov really loves. (Jonker)

Diaplaza Chess Trainings, Day 3 (July 14, 1999)

Mark Dvoretsky's lecture dealt with one of those problems known to practically all players: how to exploit an advantage? Players often fail to materialize their advantage for several reasons:

- 1) lack of energy, i.e. fatigue
- 2) shaky nerves
- 3) time trouble
- 4) lack of endgame knowledge
- 5) bad technique
- 6) bad timing.

These factors are mainly human and psychological and should be treated by means of physical and mental improvement. The abovementioned factors 4-6, however, involve a certain knowledge. There are several methods for the improvement of technique, among them: the principle of two weaknesses, avoiding potential counterchances (prophylactic thinking), playing solidly and safely and choosing the right moment to 'jump' on the opponent, making the position 'mature' (timing).

The following fragment, of a game between Walter Browne and Jan Timman in 1972, is amazing:

White: Kg1, Re3, Nf6; g5
Black: Kf7, Rb4, Bc6; b5, g6, h7

Black rejected the tempting 1...h6 in view of 2.gxh6! Kf6 3.Rh3, threatening 4.h7. Grandmaster Igor Zaitsev refused to stop calculating at this point and proposed the astounding 3...Rg4+! 4.Kf2 Rf4+ 5.Kg1 [5.Kg3 Rf3+] 5...Bd7!! 6.h7 Rf1+! 7.Kxf1 Bh3+ 8.Kf2 Kg7 and Black wins! [Afek]

The training Yusupov gave on Day 3 had the same idea as the day before. He showed some nice, strategical games where patience was the key word. Annoy your opponent and don't take action until all your pieces employ full activity, he advised. Here are the examples:

Yusupov - Christiansen

1.d4 Nf6 2.c4 d6 3.Nc3 Nbd7 4.Nf3 c6 5.e4 e5 6.Be2 Be7 7.0-0 0-0 8.Qc2 a6 9.Rd1 Qc7 10.Bg5 Re8 11.Rac1 b6 12.Bh4 Bb7 13.c5 [A nice idea in this kind of position] 13...exd4?! White: Kg2, Ra6, Ra1, Be3, Nd2; b5, c3, d5, e4, f3, g4, h5.
Black: Kc7, Rb7, Re8, Nc8, Nf7; b6, c5, d6, e5, f6, g7, h6.

1.Nc4 Rf8 2.Bd2 Re8 3.Kg3 Rd8 4.Ra8 Rb8 5.R8a4 ["Why exchange rooks when I can do it anytime I want; let the opponent suffer", Yusupov smiled]5...Rb7 6.f4 Re8 [6...exf4 followed by Re8 came into consideration.]7.Kf3 Rf8 8.Ra8 Rb8 9.R8a6 Rb7 10.Ke2 Re8 11.Kd3 Rh8 [anticipating g5] 12.Be3 Re8 13.Ra8 Rb8 14.R8a2 Rb7 15.Ra6 Rh8 16.Bd2 Rf8 17.Ra8 Rb8 18.Rxb8 Kxb8 19.g5 [white takes action]19...fxg5 20.fxg5 Nxg5 21.Bxg5 hxg5 22.Rg1 Rh8 23.Rg5 Rh7 24.Ke2 Ke7 25.Kf3 Ne7 26.Kg4 g6 27.hxg6 Rh1 28.Kf3 Rh3 29.Kf2 Rc3 30.Ne3 Ra3 31.g7 Ra8 32.Nf5 Ng8 33.Rg6 Rd8 34.Kf3 Rd7 35.Kg4 c4 36.Kf3 1-0. [Jonker]

White: Kg2, Qa5, Be4; a3,d3,f2,g4,h3.
Black: Kg8, Qb2, Nf8; f7,g6,h4.

White is winning, of course, but he does not want to give black any counterchances. After the natural 1.Qb4, Black indeed gets some counterplay by playing 1...Qe5, with the idea of bringing the knight to f4.

When White plays 1.Bd5, Black does not have a single chance. Not very difficult, but illustrative of Yusupov's style.

DiaPlaza Chess Trainings, Day 4 (July 15, 1999)

Artur Yusupov discussed the topic of identifying critical moments in the game, in which it is advisable to concentrate really hard. He demonstrated a few of his own games, underlining their most critical stages, and described the procedure of considering all candidate moves and making decisions. Here is one of those battles:

Ljubomir Ljubojevic-Artur Yusupov, Tunis izt 1985

1.e4 e5 2.Nf3 Nc6 3.Bb5 a6 4.Ba4 Nf6 5.0-0 Nxe4 6.d4 b5 7.Bb3 d5 8.dxe5 Be6 9.c3 Bc5 10.Nbd2 0-0 11.Bc2 Nxf2 [11...Bf5!?] 12.Rxf2 f6 exf6 Bxf2+ 14.Kxf2 Qxf6 15.Kg1 [15.Nf1] 15...Rae8 16.Qf1?! [25.N4f3 c5 [25...Qd3!?] 26.Ke2 Qf5] 25...Qe5+ 0-1 [26...c5].

Dvoretsky explained a couple of general ideas today. In the first half he talked about solving simple positional problems. There are three kinds of positional operations:

- 1) manoeuvring (regrouping, improving the position of the pieces)
- 2) pawn play (pawn structure and pawn advances)
- 3) exchanges.

Some operations are direct, while others are prophylactic (to stop the opponent's operations).

The following amazing operation against the black queen was carried out by an unknown player.

Connection1 Chess Experience

White: Kg1, Qd1, Ra1, Rf1, Bc1, Bd3, Nb1, Nf3; a5, b4, c3, e5, f2, g2, h2
Black: Ke8, Qh5, Ra8, Rh8, Ba7, Bc8, Nc6, Ng8; a6, b7, c7, d7, f7, g7, h7.

In a game Sprimoty-Van den berg, White played 1.Ra4!! [threatening 2.b5 and 3.Rh4]
1...Nce7 2.b5 Ng6 3.g4! Qh3 4.Re1! [threatening 5.Bf1] 4...Nh4 5.Nxh4 Qxh4 6.b6! cxb6
7.g5! Qh3 8.e6! dxe6 9.Re3! 1-0.

In the second half of his training, Dvoretsky showed that when you do not know exactly what to do in a certain position it is often a good idea to improve the position of your worst piece. He gave a very nice example:

White: Kg1, Qd3, Rc1, Rd1, Bf3, Ne2, Nd4; a2, b2, e3, f2, g2, h2
Black: Kg8, Qe5, Rd8, Re8, Bc5, Bb7, Ne4; a5, b6, d5, f7, g6, h4.

Black's position is already very comfortable, of course. But it is not very clear how he can proceed. The only black piece that does not work is his white-squared bishop. So, Black played the subtle move 1...Ra8!, with the obvious idea of 2...Ba6.

White: Ka1, Qc6, Rc1, Bd6; a2, b2, e5, g3, h2
Black: Kg8, Qd3, Rd8, Nd5; a5, b5, e6, f7, g7

Here, Black is much better. Julian Hodgson carried out an elaborate plan: he brought his rook into play via h8, h5, f5. However, before executing this plan, Black can improve his position a little by playing a suggestion of Dvoretsky's: 1...g5!

DiaPlaza Chess Trainings, Day 5 (July 16, 1999)

Artur Yusupov continued the topics of yesterday. In this training, he emphasized the important issue of prophylactic thinking. Again he demonstrated a selection of his own games on this theme. Here is one of them:

Connection1 Chess Experience

Mark Dvoretsky discussed the blockade of passed pawns and showed some surprising and fresh examples. The next one is most instructive:

White (Vukic): Kg1, Qa3, Re1, Bg2, Nd3, Nf3; a5, c5, d4, e2, f2, g3, h2.

Black (Debchevsky): Kg8, Qe7, Ra8, Be8, Nd7, Nf6; b5, c6, d5, e6, f5, g7, h7.

Black couldn't resist the temptation and played 1...Nb6?, exploiting the double pin. Yet after 2.Ne5! Na4 [2...Nc4 3.Nxc4 dxc4 4. Nb4!, white blocks the black pawn and his passed pawn on a5 decides the issue [4...Nd5 5.Bd5!+-]] 3.Nb4 Qc7 4.a6+- Bd7 5.f4 (planning e3 and Bd1) and white won in fine style. Instead, black should have played 1...Nb8! to continue 2...Na6 and block the passed pawn himself.

Round 1 - Dutch power in first round

Can a strong, active chess player be a good coach at the same time? Artur Yusupov, Uwe Borsch, Mark Dvoretzky and Yochanan Afek suggest so. But with Loek van Wely, it's different.

At the end of the first evening, the beaming chief organiser Karel van Delft announced to Van Wely that 'his' Netherlands B team had defeated Israel by 3,5-2,5. "So, should I be glad or something?" was the Dutch grandmaster's reaction in the analysis room. "All right", Van Delft admitted good-naturedly, "You're just at the start of your career as a coach." We don't rule out the possibility that Van Wely will try his luck as a player for a few more years. It may well have been Van Wely's inspiring presence, though (albeit at a safe distance), that lifted the level of the Dutch B-team to unexpected heights. Several tense games were played in this match. Especially Tom Middelburg-Alik Gershon was full of tactical blows. After a few hours, Gershon seemed to have reached a favourable endgame, but the Rotterdam player held his own and drew.

At first board, Merijn van Delft lost a pawn to grandmaster Boris Avrukh. As time grew shorter, the local player built up a dangerous-looking attack. Avrukh defended well, but the ending offered him no more winning chances.

Jeroen Willemze defeated Nati Ribshtein with a surprising combination, which under closer scrutiny by Van Wely and Ruud Janssen turned out to be not entirely correct. Ribshtein did not find the right defence, though, and went under in tactical fireworks.

Connection1 Chess Experience

At first glance, several Dutch B-players seemed to be in trouble. But Wortel and Vink drew after eventful games. Twelve-year old Daniel Stellwagen did the same. He had lost a pawn, but was somewhat irritated when he was congratulated with his half point. Jevgeni Rapoport had faced slight problems, and Stellwagen had turned down his first draw offer. The Israeli was not surprised by the strong resistance of the future Dutch star: "Before the match I had a look at some of his games", he explained. This last draw put the 3,5-2,5 victory for The Netherlands B on the board. A big surprise, because the average Elo of the Israeli's is more than 100 points higher.

"I just played two blitz games with Alexander Morozevich on the internet", Germany's second board player Jan Gustafsson announced casually. "Made a half point out of two." The first three boards of the Netherlands A-Germany match were drawn within the hour, after which the players started blitzing, surfing on the internet at the IBM internet table or in the Cybertube and exploring the futuristic surroundings of the Connection1 location. They had a good time, which is more than can be said of their colleagues Stefan Bromberger, Florian Graf and Jessica Nill. The victory of Sipke Ernst on Graf was of special interest and was proclaimed the most interesting game by Yusupov. Ernst confidently built up pressure and made a strong exchange sacrifice, after which his bishop pair in combination with a passed c-pawn proved too much for Black. Maarten Solleveld beat Nill in a long rook ending and the passed pawns of Lucien van Beek in a knight endgame were stronger than Bromberger's. A convincing 4,5-1,5 victory for the Dutch top team.

The players were unanimous in their enthusiasm about the playing conditions. The playing hall, surrounded by a small water pond and futuristic artworks by Piet Jan Blauw was hot, but the temperature was lowered by rotating fans. The tournament, partly sponsored by the Dutch chess federation, was visited by KNSB board member Arthur Schuering. He was not in function, but broke off his holiday in the nearby village of Hoenderloo to visit the event. The Connection1 website was visited 91 times during the games and has been visited 624 times from the start. 33 of yesterday's visitors were from the United States, 14 from Holland, 3 from Germany and one from Austria. An announcement in TWIC since yesterday evening may raise public interest in the coming days.

Round 2 - Tough fights and mating attacks

For the second round, the two Dutch teams were scheduled against each other, and Israel played Germany. This time there would be no quick draws. There was prestige at stake, especially in the Dutch showdown.

Van Beek courageously sacrificed a piece against Willemze for three pawns and active play. Very interesting, according to the commentators Yusupov and Dvoretzky. A crazy sacrifice of a rook by Willemze decided the game in Black's favour.

The Moscow coach also expressed admiration for the positional pawn sacrifice by Stellwagen, to activate his white-square bishop, "the dream of every French bishop", as Yusupov commented. Stellwagen got an active position with some attacking chances, but after the exchange of queens he simply won his pawn back and reached a drawn endgame. To indicate the reputation Stellwagen has already gained, coach Loek van Wely produced the snappy comment: "I'm proud of Solleveld."

De Vreugt got a good game against Vink and was contemplating an exchange sacrifice, but chose not to. Instead, he won a pawn and brought the endgame home surprisingly fast. Janssen and Middelburg chose the sharp Noteboom-variation. Janssen got a piece for two passed pawns on the queen's wing, but, more important, he got a deadly attack. Middelburg could defend, but only at the cost of a totally lost endgame.

Ernst-Wortel was an exceptionally tough struggle. Yusupov's comment on the complicated endgame that arose was: "Dangerous for white, maybe Ernst can add an endgame study to Dvoretsky's collection if he finds something." Alas, there was nothing more to find. A fine game by Wortel.

This was the only loss of the Dutch A-team, which again won by 4,5-1,5. Van Delft again fought long and hard against his second grandmaster, but had to concede the point to Van den Doel.

Two quick attacking games set the score in Israel-Germany on 1-1. Gustafsson played an unusual line, and Gershon failed to play actively. The German member of the Apeldoorn club ASG had a big advantage in space and finally won decisive material. On the other side, Nati Ribshtein built up a devastating attack against which Bromberger only had a few checks against the white king. The game ended quickly in a smothered mate.

Jessica Nill, the only female player in the event, seemed to be in trouble again in the endgame, but she struggled on. Suddenly she got an advantage ("I don't know exactly what happened", she laughed), but this wasn't enough to beat Rapoport.

An important half point, because at the other boards things looked good for Israel. But Avrukh could not break through the gritty defense of Döttling, Rabinovich lost a knight endgame with a pawn less against Machelett and the events on board four were dramatic. In a bishop ending, Kobrin vainly searched for a win against Grafl and got into great time-trouble. He couldn't satisfy himself with a draw and so went under tragically. So, instead of 3-3, Israel lost again, with 4-2. Coach Yochanan Afek was very disappointed, Uwe Borsch relieved. "This was a victory by struggle and a bit of luck", he smiled.

Round 3 - Climax ending Van den Doel and Avrukh

The match between The Netherlands A and Israel, the numbers one and four of the tournament, was of great interest. Israel had been very unfortunate in the previous rounds and needed an ego-boost. Especially grandmaster Boris Avrukh, who had only two draws and almost lost to Döttling in the second round, was out for blood. Van den Doel chose a sharp Sicilian and started attacking, but Avrukh managed to change the course of the game (a pet line of trainers/commentators Dvoretsky and Yusupov) and got what looked like a promising attack. Van den Doel, however, coolly kept collecting pawns until he was three up. In a tense game, Van den Doel steered towards an ending with a pawn up, which he won confidently in the time-trouble phase.

The game Gershon-Janssen was also very sharp, with sacrifices from both sides. The struggle ended in a draw by repetition of moves.

De Vreugt started maybe a little too optimistically. He won the exchange for two pawns, but his king remained exposed and his attack looked toothless. In the end, De Vreugt lost material in a helpless position.

Kobrin took the initiative as White against Ernst, but the Dutch IM defended well and made considerable progress. Slowly he built up a promising position, and after a few hours Kobrin's position fell apart. Again, a good positional game by Ernst.

Van Beek turned out to be the most uncompromising player of the tournament, throwing his pieces in fierce attacks just for fun. His concept against Ribshtein was dangerous, but the Israeli took a pawn on h5 and suddely was in big trouble. Van Beek surrounded the black queen and Ribshtein had to sacrifice a knight to prevent capture. After some complications, Van Beek won his third game. "I played sharply in every game", Van Beek commented.

"This tournament was a nice opportunity to experiment. Yusupov and Dvoretzky advised us to 'sacrifice' a tournament to try out a new style. That way you can learn. In my case, it didn't turn out to be a sacrifice."

Solleveld beat Rapoport, who played the opening inaccurately. In a worse position, the Israeli lost a piece and had to resign. So, The Netherlands A brought home their third convincing 4,5-1,5 victory, becoming the deserved winner of this eventful tournament.

Three short draws on the first boards again in the match The Netherlands B-Germany. Dottling-Van Delft was a sharp Queen's Gambit with a piece sacrifice, but it was all theory. "A quick draw. Probably they forgot what to play next", Yusupov thought. Jan Gustafsson reached 2 out of 3 with a minimum of work. No game of his has taken longer than two hours. It seems his future as a chess player will be quite relaxed.

Because Machelett did not find any holes in Vink's strong defence, the match was decided on the last three boards. Wortel is one of the players who made the greatest impression in this tournament. He refuted Graf's dubious strategy with a fierce attack. The German king died on f6.

Nothing was decided yet, because Willemze was in trouble against Bromberger. Yusupov called the play of the man from Leiden 'abstract', he couldn't make anything of it. Bromberger developed a dangerous attack and won decisive material.

Some interesting developments also on the last board. Stellwagen again played imaginatively against Nill. He gained the upper hand, won a piece and coolly finished the game to reach the excellent result of 2 out of 3. The Netherlands B hereby reached an unexpected second place by beating their German rivals by 3,5-2,5.
